BACKGROUND

Susannah is a professional mediator whose attentiveness to each side of a dispute allows parties to recognize their own power to reach resolution. She believes that when parties collaborate their way forward towards a solution, everyone can be satisfied with both the process and the outcome.

Studying and working abroad as a young person developed her interest in the nuances of language as well as her appreciation for the role culture and customs play in communication. Similarly, her background in library studies established a precedent of impartiality, as a guiding principle of librarianship is the presentation of information without judgment.

As an artist, she has honed her ability to see the potential of multiple, often disparate elements as outcomes greater than the sum of their parts. Through creative work, she has experienced that an openness to seeing something differently and a spirit of cooperation are keys to problem-solving.

A practiced neutral, Susannah is sensitive to the unique qualities of every dispute as well as the varied needs of the participants involved. Her goal is that parties leave mediation with their interests met as fairly and efficiently as possible.
